

Was the amount of reading assigned each week about right, and were the selections appropriate?

I think the amount of reading was appropriate - it was a lot of content (about 150 pages of dense material on average I would say), but they were necessary to understand the complexity of the issues we were discussing in class - and were very well curated by the professor, who knew how to search through the reams of material on each subject we were discussing so that we would be able to read about "only" the most important bits.

The reading selections were very appropriate in both quantity and content

The amount of reading was so manageable and the selections were well put as far as giving both sides on the perspectives on the topic at hand.

Yes, and yes!

A lot of reading, but appropriate

Yes, the reading was quite manageable and gave a great introduction to the topic.

Yes, very good readings, extremely interesting material about Ukraine and the Soviet Union.
